

Over 110 students and public health specialists trained by the NAC on anticorruption mechanisms

Over 110 people from the academic environment and the public health sector took part in two training sessions organized by officers of the National Anti-corruption Centre (NAC). The activities focused on anti-corruption mechanisms, institutional integrity, and the management of sector-specific risks.

The study visit was attended by representatives of the National Association of Law and Police Students of the Republic of Moldova (NALPS-RM), students from Moldova State University (USM), the Academy of Economic Studies of Moldova (ASEM), and other educational institutions. The young participants learned about corruption prevention and combating mechanisms, the role of integrity standards in shaping future professionals, and the importance of cultivating ethical and responsible behavior.

At the same time, a training session was organized for the employees of the Chişinău Public Health Center, attended by specialists from the municipality of Chişinău and the districts of Ialoveni, Criuleni, Străşeni, and Dubăsari. The event focused on compliance with institutional and professional ethical standards, the identification and mitigation of risks specific to the medical sector, and the importance of reporting misconduct through existing channels.

The National Anti-corruption Centre continues its training and awareness-raising activities to strengthen an environment of integrity both among the younger generation and within the country's public institutions.
